BERLIN CONGRESS

28th – 29th November 2023

About the Congress

Given the current demographic and economic challenges and the increasing scarcity of resources our society is facing, it is essential that those responsible for the fields of health care and medical research take a long hard look at the future of medicine in Germany. With investment urgently needed in climate protection and the energy transition, the health sector is competing with the rest of the economy not only for skilled workers but also for the very funds needed to finance research and teaching. Against this background, what can be done to guarantee high quality standards in health care in the future? What potential support do such developments as digitalisation and innovations in medical technology have to offer?

In close collaboration with the Charité – Universitätsmedizin Berlin, the Hanns Martin Schleyer Foundation and the Heinz Nixdorf Foundation will be addressing precisely these questions at what is now our 5th Interdisciplinary Congress on YOUNG SCIENCE AND PRACTICE. Hosting selected experts renowned in their fields, the congress will shed light on the interplay between the various individuals and institutions concerned with these issues in science, politics and civil society.

The congress is particularly aimed at young researchers, who will be given the opportunity to present their innovative ideas and fresh approaches to thorny questions in the form of short talks delivered to the working groups. Here they can discuss their research results with leading practitioners and thus critically examine the applicability of what they have learned at university and the practicability of their proposed solutions. These gatherings, which are often the first testing grounds for a new generation of researchers, also offer them an opportunity to make personal contacts with established experts in their field.

Be a part of this interdisciplinary exchange of science and practice! We look forward to welcoming you as a participant at our congress.

The Hanns Martin Schleyer Foundation and the Heinz Nixdorf Foundation together with Charité – Universitätsmedizin Berlin cordially invite you to attend the 5th Interdisciplinary Congress
